We believe we can make preventative care prescribable.

We also believe individuals and communities should be engaged in how their care happens.

Meet Khadija

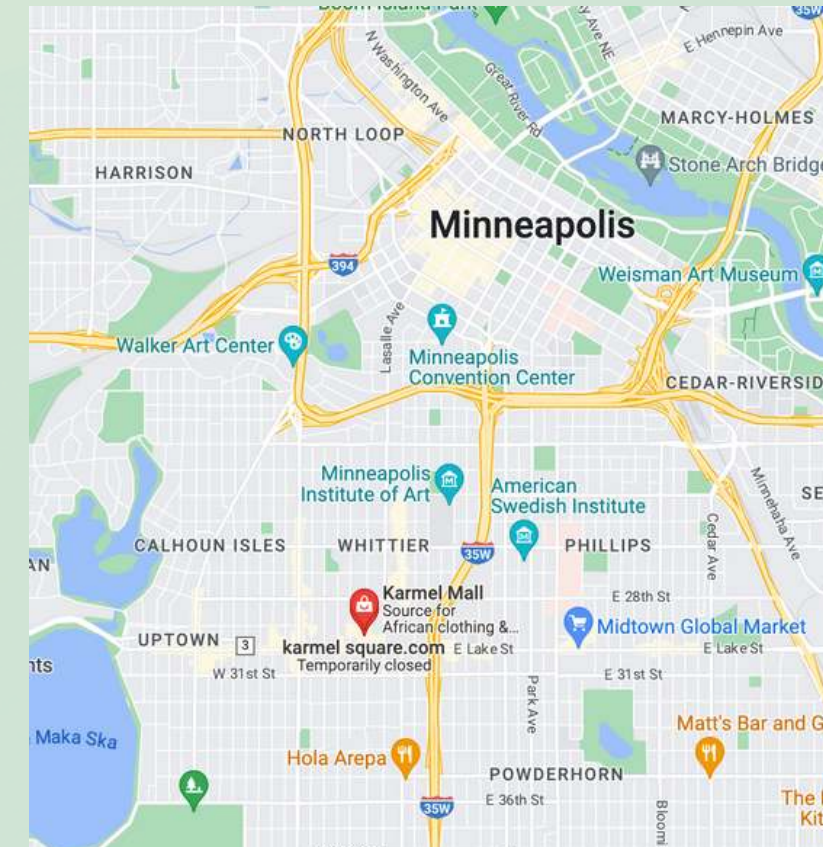

Khadija is a mom of two. She is a Somali woman living in Minneapolis, MN. Her and her family immigrated to Minneapolis recently.

Minneapolis, MN

The Somali population in Minnesota is vibrant and has created a flourishing community in Minneapolis. They have created shopping centers and businesses catering to their community, all in one place.

- Minnesota has the largest Somali population in the U.S. (2017 US Census Bureau)
- An estimated 70,000+ Somalis living in Minnesota

Khadija needs care.

Khadija's job is physically straining, and she is experiencing back pain. She hears about GoodDays, a preventative care and community clinic through a recommendation from a friend.

Khadija meets her doctor

She is "prescribed", alongside medicine, strength training to help with her back pain and a knitting circle to help with her loneliness.

Khadija gets care

Khadija inquires on where and when to go for this since she does not own a car and has a busy schedule. Doctor mention she can have access to all of these activities in the preventative care center down the hall.

Khadija gets introduced

Khadija meets with preventative care center coordinator who is also Somali American and she talks her through the center's activities.

Khadija connects

Khadija gets to join in on the knitting circle right after her appointment and she has a good time. The next day in the evening, she attends strength training class after work. She was able to get there easily because the clinic is in her neighborhood.

Khadija spreads the word

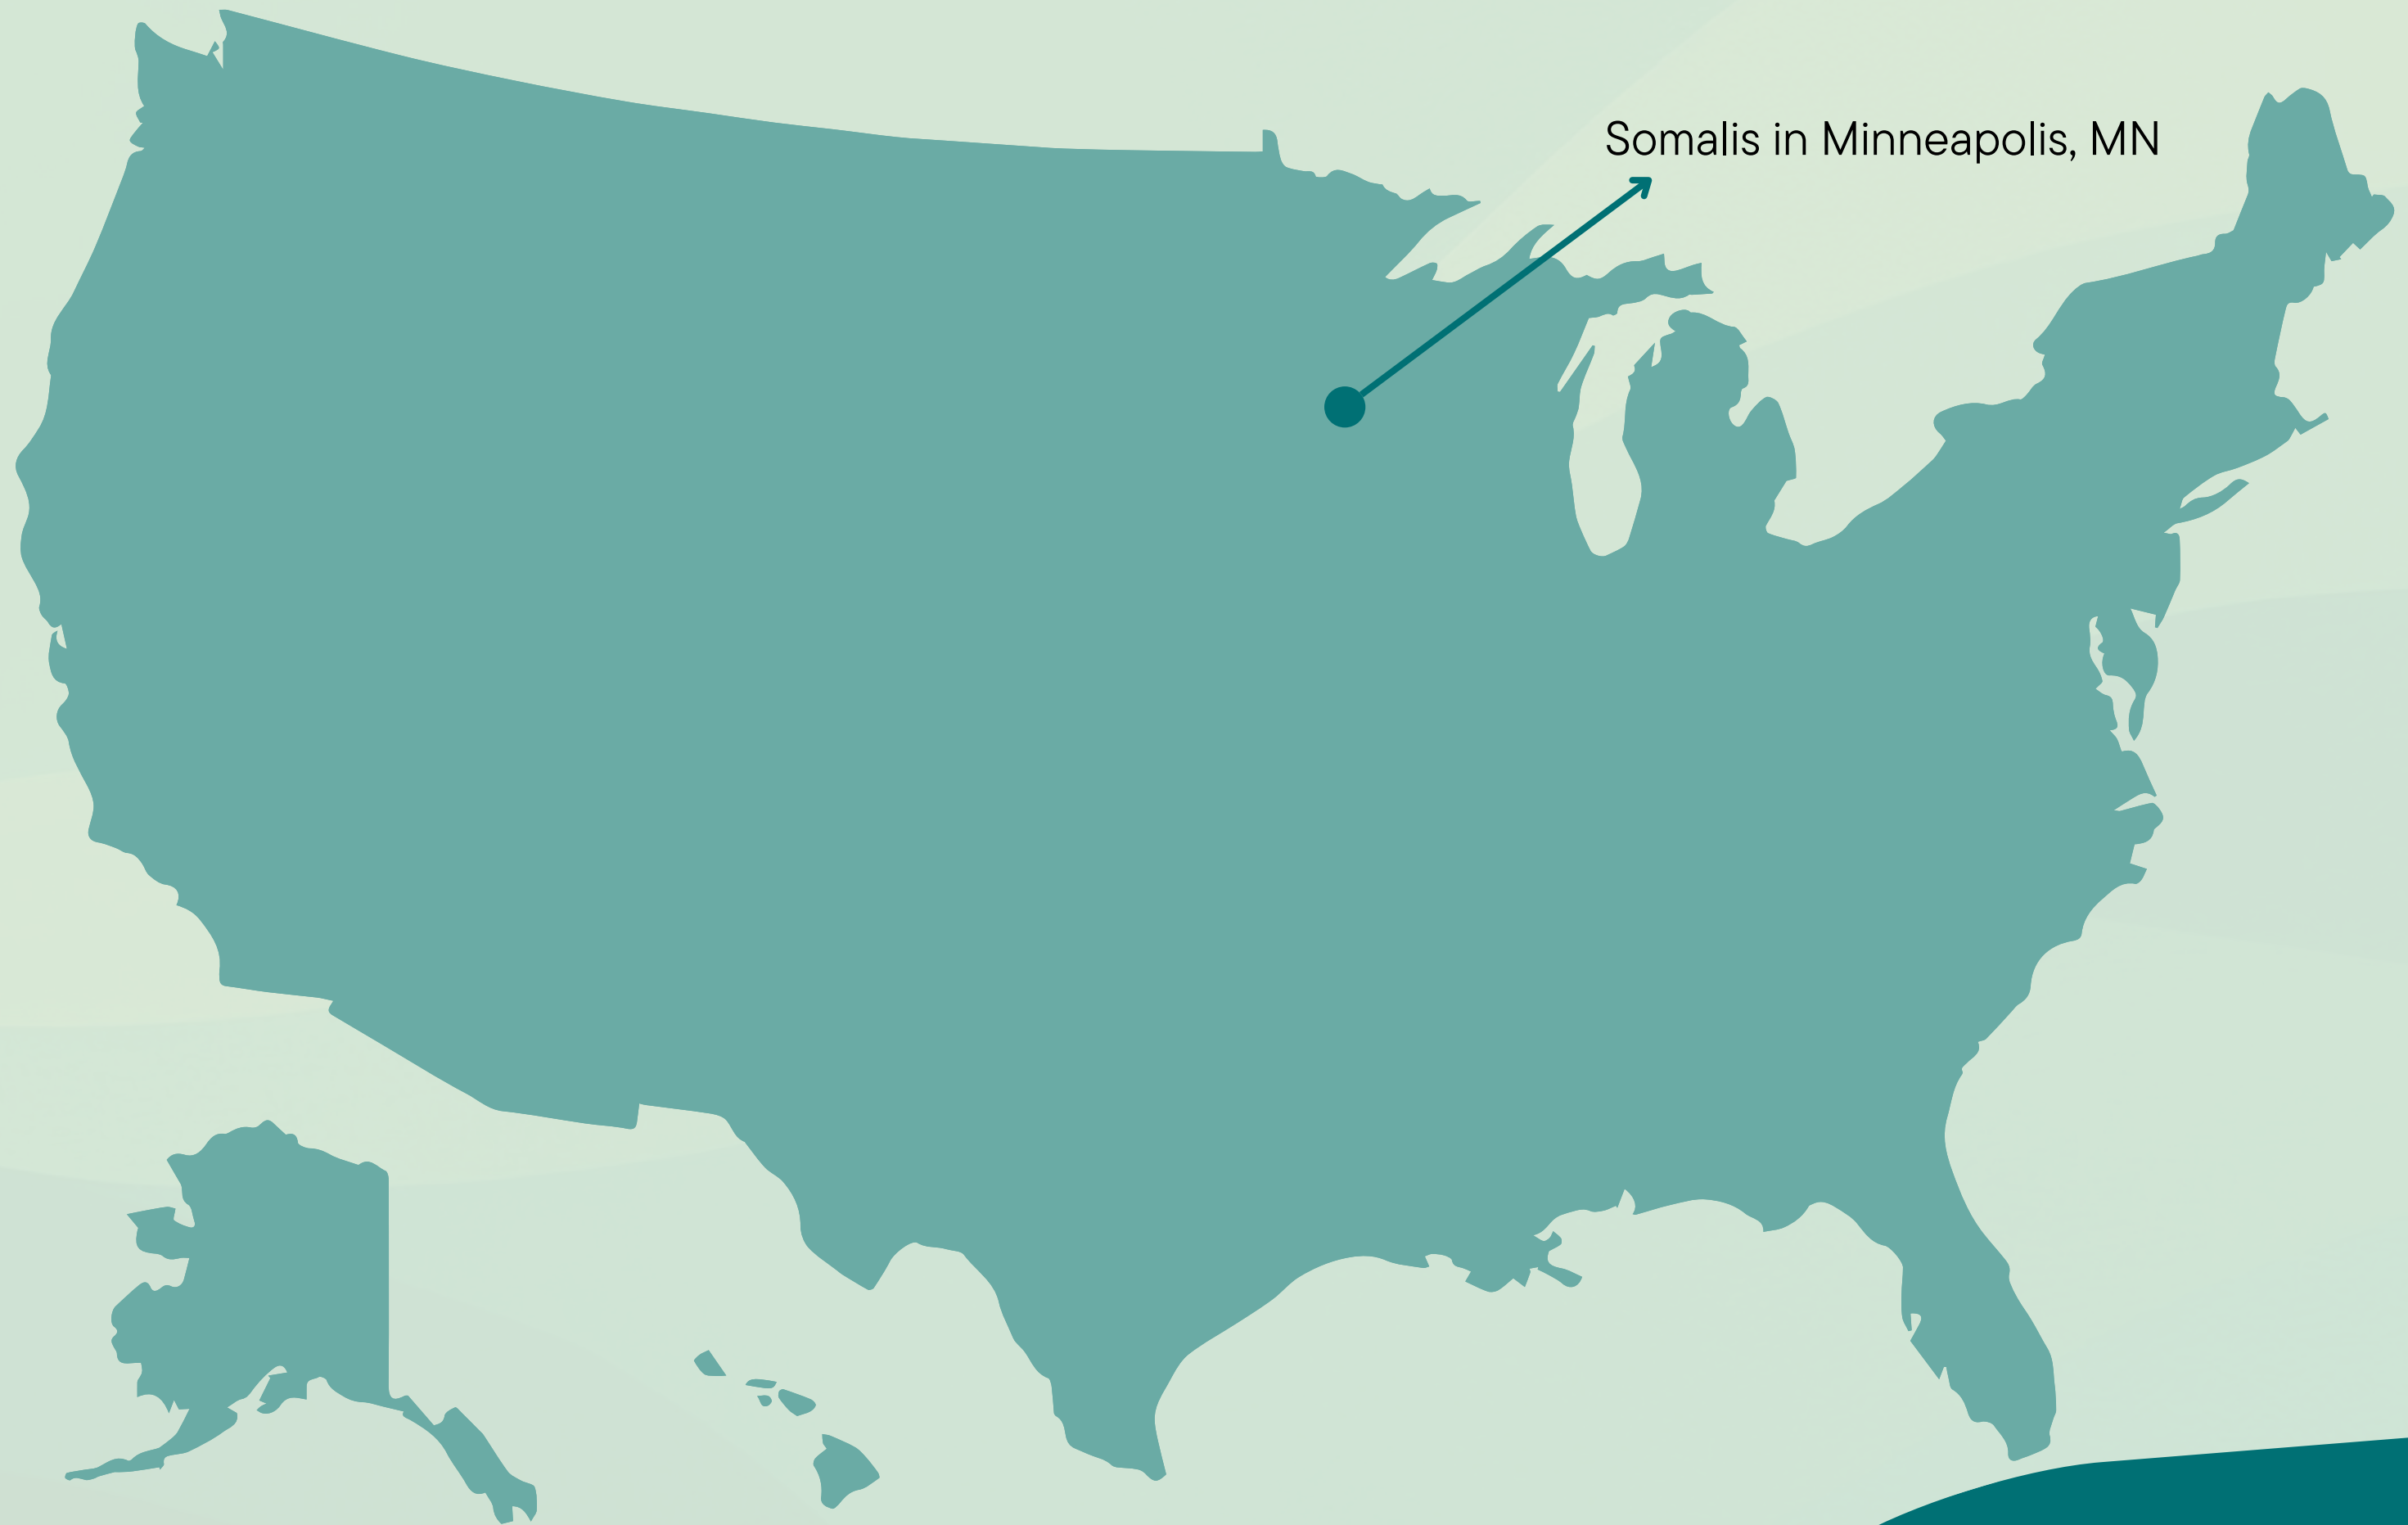

Khadija has been loving her experience at the clinic and the community she's found there. She definitely spreads the word to people. She also seeks regular preventative care now because it is often recommended and available. Her friends and community also seek out preventative care more often, now there is a culture of seeking continuous preventative care through the center.

Khadija gives back

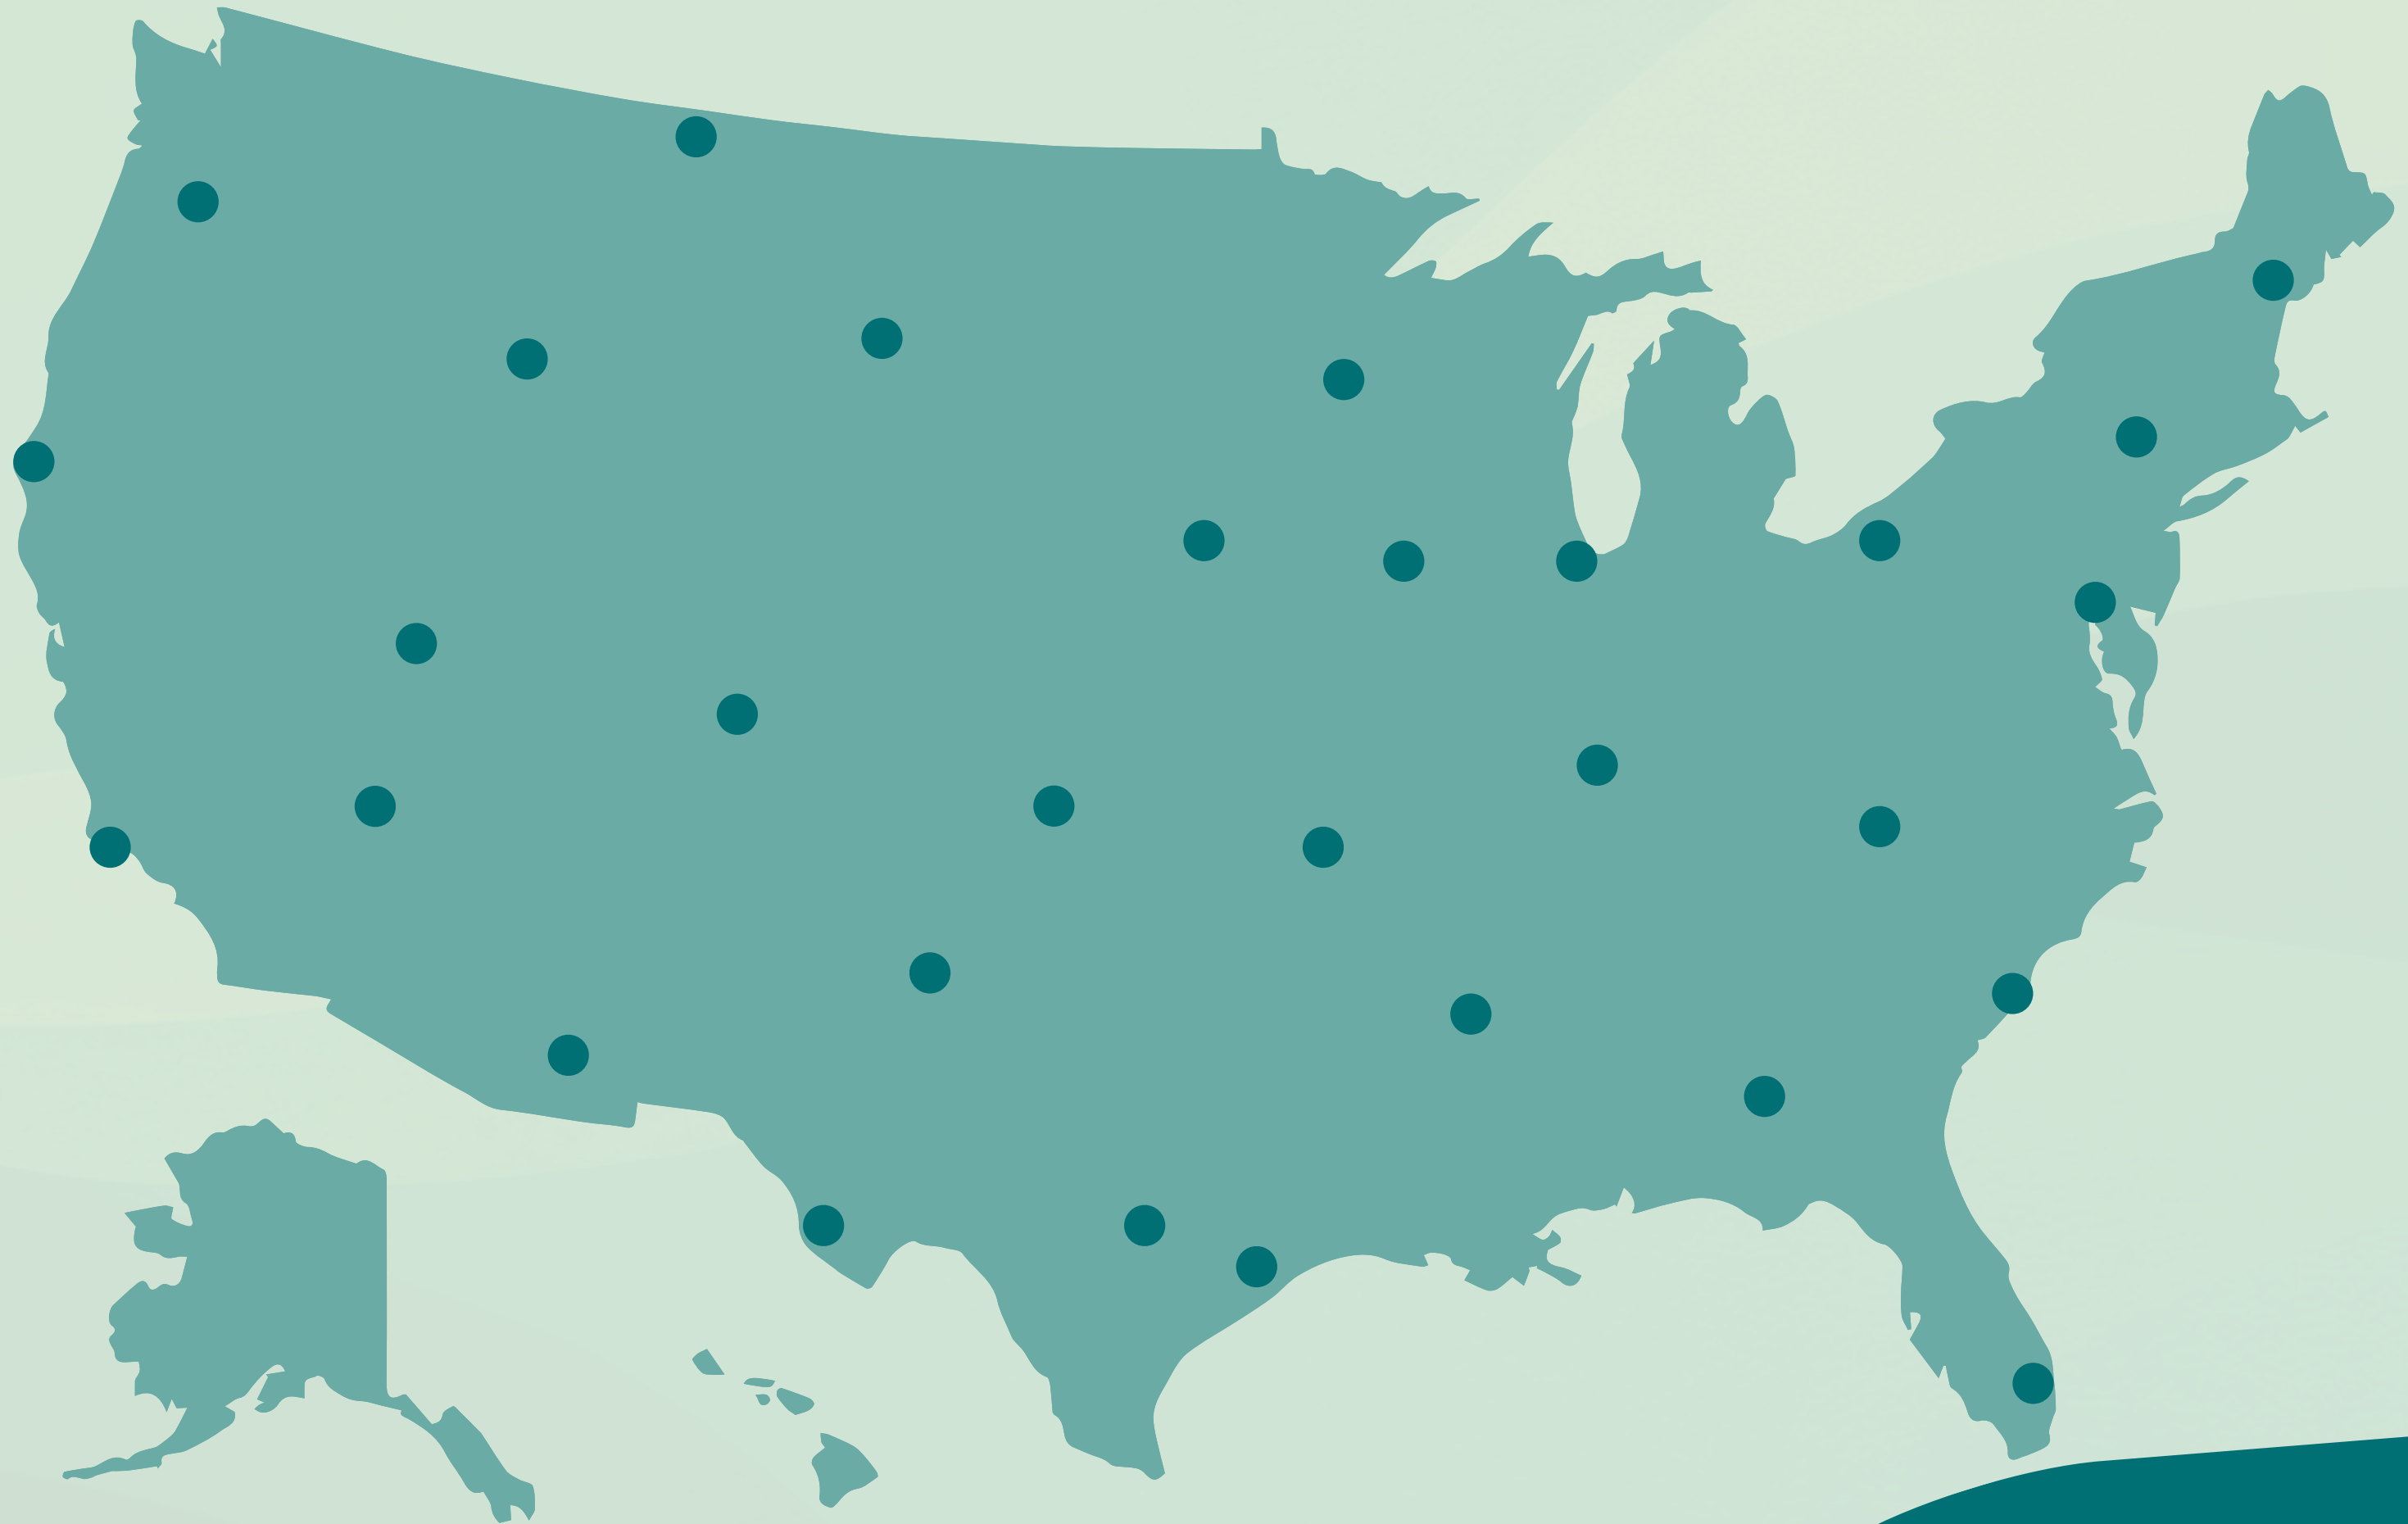

Khadija tells her 17 year old son about the clinic. Her son who is interested in health and loves community building gets involved at the preventative clinic through volunteering. Khadija herself, later on, decides to join the Community Expert Board for the clinic to contribute.
